Background information

The residents in a community have been discussing possible future uses for an area of land that has not been used since the closure of a railway line. The local city council owns the land and will decide how the land should be used. The Grow Slow Garden Group has proposed that the land be used for a community garden.

The leader of the Grow Slow Garden Group has produced a newsletter, as shown on pages 12 and 13. Before the council's decision is made, this newsletter will be distributed to every household in the local area.

Getting our future back on the rails – slowly

As everyone knows, the Council is about to decide what to do with the disused railway yards near our city centre. At present this land is just an ugly place where some inconsiderate people dump rubbish. Everyone has had the chance to suggest ideas, including those people who want the land fenced and concreted over to use for skateboarding or for yet another car park. We hope the Council will decide in favour of a community garden.

However, there has been a lot of misinformation and misguided comment. This newsletter aims to correct any misunderstanding and give you accurate information.

Some people who object to the proposed garden seem to think the idea comes from a radical group of environmentalists. There's nothing extreme about the Grow Slow group and we are proud to be contributing to a greener Australia. In fact it's time the Council took notice of international trends and approved our plan to transform this shockingly neglected wasteland into fresh, natural land.

This is a forward-thinking Council and it has the chance to bring us up to date with the rest of the world. City farms and cooperative, shared gardens are common in other countries. And they can be surprisingly productive. It might seem like a hobby but these small gardens provide a lot more than just recreational activity. It's estimated that the number of people who eat food grown in urban farms or community gardens is in the hundreds of millions across the globe.

There are also some who think our idea is just a passing fashion. Community gardening is not just a passing fashion. During the Second World War, everyone in Britain was encouraged to 'Dig for Victory' by growing vegetables in every bit of spare land – backyards, nature strips and vacant land were all dug up in the struggle to keep families fed. In the crisis of war, people suddenly understood that their society was vulnerable if they couldn't produce their own food.

In more recent times in Britain the Queen herself has converted some land at Buckingham Palace into a food garden, just as it was during the war when she was young. And in America the First Lady has started growing food in the grounds of the White House.

Now, 70 years after the Second World War, we are facing a different sort of crisis. It is obvious that the vegetables that arrive on your family's table by the 'slow' method, grown from seed in your own local garden, are going to be better for your health. What some people don't see is that when we grow our own fresh food, it is much less likely to be wasted or thrown out. When you've grown your own food, you value it. If there's too much to eat, you don't throw it out: you share with others. So everybody benefits.

People are used to making many trips to the shops in their many cars to buy processed or packaged food. They are used to hopping into their cars to get takeaway food for their families too. Not only are these car trips bad for the environment but convenience food carries a hidden price tag because a lot of it becomes waste in a rubbish bin. This adds to environmental damage.

Data: NSW Environment Protection Authority

*What price
does Planet Earth have to pay for your convenience?*

We can't go on like this. It's time we started to grow and use fresh food in a way that will benefit our planet, as well as ourselves.

And let's not forget the many other benefits from the activity of gardening. A lot of primary schools now have food gardens because they are a great way to learn. Most of us can remember our Dad or Grandfather showing us how to put seeds in the earth and to water them in. We might remember the satisfaction of our first home-grown vegetables. Our kids spend far too much time indoors and nothing could be healthier for them than doing some physical work in the fresh air. Learning how to grow their own food might help them and others to survive if there is a food shortage in the future. And they'll get to know their neighbours. Community gardening is for everyone. There is always plenty to share and nothing says 'friendship' like a gift of home-grown fresh food.

So to you, the community, we say join in! Tell the Council you support the idea and help us make this a success. It is a rare chance for all of us to get together and work towards the same goal, to 'Dig for Victory' again – this time for a healthier future for ourselves, our children and our planet.
